

#4 On the March

Union soldiers and artillery begin the long march south during the Civil War.

Serving in infantry, cavalry and artillery regiments, Stratford men joined the hundreds of thousands of men in the Union Army.

Often troop movements consisted of marching men and artillery from one point to another. These marches put a strain on local farmers and towns as soldiers often “liberated” or “borrowed” supplies to supplement their rations.

